On approach to a small private landing field, the aircraft rolled left and crashed in the garden of a private house. The loss of control was probably caused by loss of airspeed in gusty conditions as the pilot attempted to approach the confined landing area. The investigation found no indication of any mechanical defect that would have contributed to the accident.