

Mr. TURBAYAR Erdene-Ochir began his career in 2007 as a Cable Technician at the Civil Aviation Authority of Mongolia. Over the next several years, he held various roles, including Engineer in the Transmission Equipment Section (2009–2013), Senior Engineer in the Radio Communications Section (2016), and Head of the Technical Support and Navigation Services Department (2016–2020).

---

He then transitioned into leadership roles, serving as Director of the Communications, Navigation, and Surveillance Division (2020), Director of the Air Navigation Services Department (2020–2023), and Director of the National Civil Aviation Center of Mongolia (NCAC) (2023–2025).

As of January 16th, 2025, he is appointed as Director General of the Civil Aviation Authority of Mongolia.

In pursuit of academic excellence, Turbayar earned a Bachelor's Degree in Radio Communications Engineering in 2007 and a Master's Degree in Information and Communication Technology in 2012. His professional development includes more than 15 years of continuous training, with certifications and specialized courses completed in Japan, Thailand, and India. These programs covered topics such as air transport policy for senior executives, safety risk management. During his career in aviation sector he participated in implementation of projects for the renovation and modernization of Mongolia's air navigation infrastructure ensuring his expertise in modern aviation standards and technologies.

Mr. Turbayar has an experienced leadership in managing diverse teams and overseeing complex civil aviation communications engineering projects. He excels in operational efficiency, has a strong communication skills and English fluency. His adaptability and resilience gained him a career growth in the aviation industry and focus on safety, efficiency, and innovation.